Why voters should choose you

Above all, pediatricians treasure relationships—with patients, parents, colleagues. We now face threats to those bonds: overwork, a mental health crisis, divisive politics. To ensure our future, we must protect the relationships that nurture our patients and our spirits. Together we must first support each other, then we must engage those who share differing experiences, listening to their perspectives with curiosity and humility and seeking ground where we can all agree on what seems obvious to us: our top priority must be the wellbeing of all children. I am prepared to serve you so we can all better serve children.
